Undaunted by defeat at the hands of upstate rural legislators, Bob Ford is at it again. This time his pet reform is modernization of Michigan county government. And this time he is shooting his barrage from the educational security of the University of Michigan's bureau of government, of which he is the director.

In collaboration with Claude R. Tharp, research associate in the bureau, Dr. Ford has come out with a most interesting and challenging study. Its title is "Reorganization of Michigan's County Government".

It was this same Ford who bravely attempted to carry out orders from Governor Harry F. Kelly to modernize the state government at Lansing. One project, we recall, was the consolidation of the state insurance and state banking departments. An administrative assistant to the Governor, Dr. Ford worked hard and diligently at Lansing. He burned the midnight oil by the gallon. He assembled facts by the ton.

As administrative assistant, head of a new department, Bob earned his money. But the legislature thought otherwise. Members decided to economize on Ford, and he was left high and dry.

The defects of Michigan county government, as Dr. Ford sees them, are about four in number. First, there is no "over-all administrative" head. Second, there is no "considerable duplication of functions between agencies". For example, "county records are kept by the county clerk or register of deeds, and the abstractor of titles, although the county clerk is the chief recording officer and is responsible for certain financial functions".

The administration of social welfare is also divided among a number of agencies. Probate court, county department of social welfare, and the soldiers' and sailors' relief commission. Six independent agencies administer public works. And three separate agencies are in charge of activities established to promote agricultural interests within the county.

Third conclusion: The board of supervisors "is too large and possesses both legislative and administrative powers". It is Ford's contention that reduction of big-size boards "would be conducive to efficiency and economy", and he points out that Wayne County's board has 84 members, Oakland 67, Kent 54, Saginaw 51, Calhoun 38 and Genesee 37.

We quote: "In all of these counties, the board of supervisors is larger than the state senate, which has 32 members."

Fourth conclusion: "The 'bed-sheet' size ballots of elective officials. This reference is obviously intended for populous counties where 'name' candidates thrive and where the voter is near helpless to identify good candidates from bad candidates.

Conceding that popular election is the essence of democracy, Ford quotes one authority as having said: "Popular elections will eat the heart out of democracy if carried to the extreme."

The big obstacle to needed reform, as the university expert sees it, is the state constitution. The state constitution of 1908 permits considerable freedom for cities, and as a result a large majority of them have home rule charters. Michigan leads all other states, with 58 manager cities. Maine is a close second with 57.

Two years ago—1944—the November election brought defeat to a proposed home rule for Wayne County. It was defeated by a margin of 136,000 votes. The proposed reform was inspired by graft revelations coming out of one-man jury investigations in 1941 and 1942.

At that time the Michigan institute of Local Government was opposed to the amendment, just as it was this year to the proposed sales tax diversion amendment. State Treasurer D. Hale Brake is its president.

The institute then appointed a special study committee and finally recommended that the state constitution be amended to provide an alternate form of county government, if approved by voters at a special or general election. Then each county, if desiring to come under the plan, would have to hold a special election. Next a nonpartisan primary election and then an election to select charter commissioners. And finally a fifth election to approve or reject the charter commissioners' charter.

County governments would be streamlined by the institute to provide for a county council to be appointed by the board of supervisors, and a "county chief executive" to be appointed by the board of supervisors. It is suggested that either the county clerk or the county controller be designated as the "county chief executive" who

Local Boy On Way Home From Tokyo

James Remer, former Grayling boy, now living with George Annis, near Grayling, is expected home any day from Tokyo, where he has been serving with the armed forces.

In a telegram to Mr. Annis, sent from Tokyo on October 28, he said: "Greetings from Tokyo. I am well and I am leaving for home on Thursday from Yokosuka."

Name 2 Seniors In Competition

At a class meeting held October 15, 1946, two seniors from Grayling High School were honored by their fellow students when they were elected to compete with seniors from other high schools throughout the United States and territories for the 121 four-year college scholarships and more than 600 fifty-dollar certificates of merit being offered again this year by the Pepsi-Cola Scholarship Board.

Chosen from among 29 of their classmates as the students "most likely to make important contributions to human progress", these outstanding boys and girls will represent Grayling in the competition. They are Roseanne Kearney and Richard Grimstad.

At 8:00 a. m. Friday, February 14, Grayling High School, these candidates will take a special aptitude test which has been especially prepared for this competition by the College Entrance Examination Board, an independent testing board composed of representatives of America's largest colleges and universities.

According to the principal, W. E. Kumpulka, every precaution has been taken by the Scholarship Board to insure the uniform testing necessary for complete fairness to all candidates throughout the country. The tests will arrive at his office in a sealed package and are not to be opened until the day of the examination and then only in the presence of the candidates. That this test be administered fairly and uniformly to all candidates is imperative, said Mr. Kumpulka, since it serves as one of the most important bases for selecting the boys and girls to be awarded the scholarships and certificates of merit in this third nationwide competition.

Other factors to be taken into consideration in choosing the winners will be the school record, leadership ability, and financial need of the candidates. All winners will be announced on April 18.

Return Colors To State Guard

The nation's most elaborate ceremony of its kind occurred in Lansing on Armistice Day when military vehicles loaded with veterans, State Troops, and officers and men of the newly recruited Michigan National Guard, from scores of Michigan communities, converged on the capital city for the official return of the colors to the Guard.

Simultaneous ceremonies were held in 47 states. The Michigan event was the most spectacular as the state has led the country in organizing its new National Guard of 25,000 officers and men, three times its pre-war strength, and it was the only state where all units were reformed in the capital city for the ceremonies.

Standing before Governor Harry F. Kelly at 12 noon and completely filling the large capitol lawn as the regimental colors were officially returned to Michigan by Major General Louis A. Craig, Deputy Commanding General, 5th Army Headquarters, were ranks of seasoned combat veterans of World War II from every city in the state, who have fought in every major battle, and who are now members of the new Michigan National Guard.

They were dressed for the first time in the Army uniforms that they stored in mothballs after their discharge from military service. Also standing before the Governor were 1,000 Michigan State Troops who policed and maintained order on the parade route. The streets were lined with the "arsenal of democracy" after the Guard was mobilized in 1940 and sent to Louisiana for training and shipment to all parts of the world.

Following the acceptance of the colors by Governor Kelly, stored since Pearl Harbor in the Army Depot at Columbus, Ohio, the colors of Michigan's famous regiments

DRUM CORPS MARCHES HERE

The newly organized Grayling American Legion Post Drum and Bugle Corps marched in downtown Grayling Armistice night. They were lighted by flares held by marchers, the drum and bugle corps, which had been practicing but a short time, gave a fine account of themselves. A large number of people lined the sidewalks along the line of march to see and hear the new group.

were borne to the floor rotunda of the capitol where they will be temporarily kept until all units of the new Guard have been federally recognized and fully activated. On view in the rotunda in glass cases are permanently kept the historic battle flags which have been carried into every battle back to the Civil War.

Symbols have played an important part in the history of the world," said Governor Kelly. "Perhaps one of the most significant symbols ever used is the flag. The armies of tyrants and liberators alike have been led by flags and banners which have represented their ideals, standards, and motives."

Previous to the ceremonies on the capitol lawn, a gigantic parade a mile and a half long and lasting an hour, marched down the capital city's streets, led by the Michigan State College Band. The parade were five different bands, units of various veterans organizations, armored equipment, and overheard an aerial parade of 100 planes of the new Michigan National Guard and Army.

The parade was met at the capitol by the University of Michigan Band and as the ceremonies took place the flight of planes circled over the capitol.

Walkinhood - Campbell Vows Spoken

Clara Walkinhood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Walkinhood, and Gerald Campbell, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell, both of Grayling, spoke their marriage vows before Rev. Bertha Davis at the Free Methodist Church Parsonage at 8:00 p. m., Saturday, November 9. Mr. and Mrs. Vivian Campbell attended the couple, and Sally and Bethany Campbell served as flower girls.

The bride's wedding dress was a white satin floor length gown with which she wore a floor length veil and carried white baby mums. Mrs. Campbell as matron of honor, chose a white jersey floor length model with sequin trimming, and her flowers were mixed pansies and asters. Mrs. James McClung played "I Love You Truly" and "Oh Promise Me," accompanied vocally by Floyd Davis.

A buffet supper followed the ceremony, given by Rev. Davis at the parsonage. Twenty-five guests were present. The newlyweds left for a week's honeymoon in the South and Ohio, after which they will be at home to their friends at 1240 Pennsylvania Street, Detroit.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Bennett announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Annette, to Lawrence Laughon, of Bay City—former Frederic resident.

LEGION TO HEAD DRIVE FOR GIFTS

Christmas gift boxes for every one of Michigan's 12,000 hospitalized war veterans is the goal of the American Legion's "Gifts for the Yanks Who Gave" campaign, just getting under way for the third successive year. All Legion posts in the state, with their Auxiliary units, will co-operate in the program, to the end that no sick or disabled veteran shall be forgotten on Christmas Day.

The generous aid of all citizens will be solicited to help provide the great array of gifts required. Donors may either contribute cash for the purchase of gifts by the Legion committees, or prepare their boxes individually. Legion posts will act as receiving stations for the Christmas boxes and assemble them for delivery late in December to all hospitals in the state where veterans are patients.

Sports Council Approves Budget

At the Alpena meeting of the directors of the East Michigan Winter Sports Council held last Thursday, a $7,000 advertising and publicity budget was approved and a non-conflicting schedule of festivals and events for the entire season was set. The luncheon meeting was held at the Elks Club in that city.

The reporting of snow conditions and prospects at every winter sports center in northeastern Michigan was set as a network plan, to be cleared for the press and radio through the Bay City Log Office.

The budget was divided, with $3,800 to be spent in newspaper advertising in southern Michigan, $1,500 for the printing of folders, $350 for prizes in a window display contest in the large city stores, $115 for a photo contest, and the remainder for communication and postage expense.

Grayling donated a check of $200 with Winter Sports Chairman Art Clough promising more later on. All winter sports centers represented either presented a check or pledge, and the budget appeared to be over-subscribed. Attending the meeting with Clough was Chamber of Commerce Secretary Jerome Kessler.

The advertising and publicity prospectus was presented by Burrows Morley, Saginaw, chairman of that committee. Earl Burns presided at this section, which drew a quarter of a million winter sports enthusiasts this season, in comparison to the 110,000 of last year.

The next meeting of the council was scheduled at Tawas City on December 12. Council President Richard Fletcher of Bay City presided at the meeting. Along with group singing and several musical selections, a color movie of skiing at Sun Valley, Idaho, was screened.

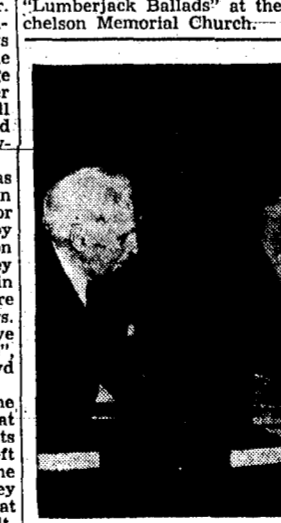

Woman's Club

The first regular meeting of the Grayling Woman's Club was held Monday, November 11, for a social meeting at the home of Mrs. A. J. Jost heavy Mrs. Jost presided. Twenty-two old members and the following new ones were present: Mrs. C. Smith, Mrs. G. Day, Mrs. R. Clement, Mrs. N. Watway, Mrs. Carl Peterson, Jr., Mrs. John Peterson and Mrs. Widman.

A short business meeting included the paying of dues and the discussion of projects for the year. Mrs. Burns gave an interesting report on the first day of the Northern District meeting in Alpena, with Mrs. Stealy reporting for the second day.

The meeting concluded with the serving of coffee and doughnuts by Mrs. Joseph, Mrs. Alfred Sorenson, Mrs. J. F. Cook and Mrs. Oscar Schumacher.

The next meeting, to be held on November 25, will be open to the public. Dr. Beck of Central Michigan College will speak on "Lumberjack Ballads" at the Milneson Memorial Church.

U. S. DELEGATION TO UNITED NATIONS

Boys Run Wild Against Grayling.

Facing the best runners of the Northern C League, the Grayling Green Wave was rolled back by five touchdowns at Boyne City last Saturday in the season's finale. The game was featured by a Boyne pass interception and run-back of 105 yards for a touchdown by Mullaney, Boyne halfback. J. Moore, on a pass play, went 60 yards for a score. West, Boyne back, termed by Coach Willard Cornell as the best running back in the conference, counted four times against the locals, two on runs of 60 and 80 yards.

Although Grayling averaged 10 pounds heavier per man than the Boyne City eleven, the shifty running attack of the winners proved too much for the local eleven. On offense, the local team again showed that they were not too interested in playing football. They received the kickoff and on the first scrimmage in which Grayling threw an off-tackle slant at Boyne City, every defensive man was on his feet to stop the runner. The Grayling team did not block one Boyne City player out of action.

Use 22 Players Coach Cornell used 22 men in an effort to find a combination that might click, without success. Captain Harry Miller was lost near halftime when his nose was fractured.

The loss gave the Wave an even break for the season, with four wins against a like number of defeats. This is the poorest record hung up by a Grayling team since Coach Cornell took over the reins of the Grayling High School athletic department. A win would have given the Wave third place in the conference the loss elevated Boyne City to third and dropped Grayling to sixth.

Six boys were playing their final high school game, all seniors. They are: Captain Harry Miller, Goss, Crawford and Grimstad, all linemen, and Carlson and Keway, backfield players. With a sigh of relief, undoubtedly, Coach Cornell turned his attention to basketball. Practice for the cagers began Monday afternoon. The opening game is scheduled for November 26. The complete cage schedule and prospects for the coming season will appear in next week's edition of the Avalanche.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Schumaker announce the engagement of their sister, Phyllis Ann Long, of Grayling, to Mr. Jack B. Barber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Foryst D. Barber. The wedding will take place December 7 in Detroit.

Local Club Meets With Kalkaskians

Nearly 50 Grayling Kiwanis Club members, their guests and a group from Kalkaska met for dinner and a short meeting at Camp Kalkaska on Manistee Lake last Wednesday evening.

The dinner was sponsored by the local club to acquaint the group from the neighboring city to the west with the purposes and aims of Kiwanis. The main speakers at the meeting following the dinner were Lieut.-Gov.-elect Charles Moore and Past Lieut.-Governor Emil Giegling.

A fine dinner was served by Mr. and Mrs. John House, owners of the modern, new boys' camp located on the west shore of Manistee Lake. The meeting was presided over by the president of the local club, Robert Strong. The Kalkaska representatives seemed enthused over the prospect of a luncheon and service club for their city and Kalkaska. Prosecuting Attorney Paul Wyman and County Agent L. W. Barnes spoke briefly.

Following the more formal session, the group broke up into small parties to talk over the possibilities of establishing a Kiwanis Club in Kalkaska and local club members answered queries of the visiting Kalkaskians pertaining to the club and its functions.

Dr. R. A. Barrus was received as a new member of the Grayling club at the dinner and was presented with his pin by Mr. Moore. Dr. Stanley A. Stealy was named as chairman and Dr. C. G. Clippert and Frank Bond as members of a nominating committee to select a list of candidates for next year by President Strong.

Trout Plantings Set New Record

The Conservation Department's ambitious goal of planting a full million legal-size trout this year was still a bit out of range at the beginning of November, with 923,771 already stocked and only a few lakes yet to be planted this month and next. But the 923,771 stocked thus far set a new record for Michigan, being 53,343 more than the total plant of legal-size fish in 1945 and more than 300,000 above the number stocked in 1944.

This record production of legal-size trout was achieved in spite of continuously uncertain conditions in the meat packing industry, chief source of hatchery fish food. For most of the year the hatcheries and rearing stations operated on a week-to-week basis, with no assured fish food supply.

Goal for 1947 will be 1,000,000 brook, brown and rainbow trout of the ready-to-catch size. Steadily increasing costs are now the chief threat to the '47 program, and maintenance of present quantity production of legal-size trout is dependent upon increased license fees. Without additional income, savings have to be trimmed to fit higher costs. While the Conservation Department's fish division continues quantity production, all trout planted are to be fin-clipped to measure the worth of the plantings in the fishermen's creels. Stream improvement work is continuing at the same time.

A total of 3,297,453 brook, brown and rainbow trout have been planted this season, but 2,373,662 of them were smaller than legal size when stocked. Brook trout led the 1946 parade with a total of 455,746 legal and 1,182,984 smaller fish. Legal-size brown trout stocked totaled 228,662, and 238,363 rainbow trout seven inches long or longer were planted.

Upper Peninsula trout lakes and trout streams received 290,649 legal and 708,600 smaller trout, while Lower Peninsula waters were stocked with 633,122 legal and 665,082 smaller trout.

REVIVE GOLDEN GLOVES IN NORTH

Amateur boxing will be revived in Northern Michigan this year after a long time lay off, when entries from thirteen Northern Michigan communities will again compete in the Northern Michigan Golden Gloves tournament to be held in Boyne City, January 27, 28 and 29.

Over 500 tournaments will be held under A.A.U. sanction throughout the state. Winners who clear through the Northern Michigan tournament will compete in the state tournament at Grand Rapids.

The 1947 tournament will mark the first revival of organized boxing in this area since 1941 when the last tournament was held. A large field of veterans who learned their boxing in the service is expected to swell the year's entry list.

Invitations are being extended this week to veterans' organizations, service clubs, and athletic

LIBRARY NOTES

November 10-15 is Book Week, observed internationally in thirty-nine countries around the world where readers of all colors, tongues and traditions are making their mutual interest in books one more stepping-stone on the long, long way toward World Peace and World Friendship.

This year's celebration is built around the theme "Books are Bridges", and all readers know how true that is—how surely a well-written book bridges the gulf between adolescence and adulthood, between poverty and wealth, between the present and the past.

And just as truly, good books have the power to bridge the chasms between Capital and Labor, between conflicting social and political ideologies, between nations divided by war, races separated by prejudices, groups involved in religious strife, and countless other groups motivated by the varying hatreds born of fear, ignorance, and misunderstanding.

Long ago, someone said "Let us write the nation's songs and I care not who writes her laws", for philosophers have long known that the pen, indeed, is mightier than the sword, that he who writes the songs and tales of a nation is the bridge-builder linking the Past with the Future, and today's readers know that we inhabit One World, content to be content, and nation to nation, by the Bridges which are Books.

LIBERTY DAY PROGRAM—On Monday a minute's silent prayer was observed through the schools, starting shortly after 11:00 a. m. The High School held an assembly sponsored by Mr. Lawler. The program was meant to show the causes and effects of war.

Nancy Cox listed the causes of World War I. Edmund Holm read a letter describing war by a soldier. Jackie Warwood gave the causes of World War II. Ed Carlson read the description of conditions on a Jap prison ship from which 83 out of some 750 American prisoners escaped alive.

Mr. Lawler closed the program by summing up our place in preventing future wars.

Al Cherven of the Green's Tavern squad grabbed both high individual honors in the single game and series, with a 203 and 532. Roy Milnes' 611 is still high for the season in the individual series department, while Charley Long's 255 is still the highest single game.

Cherven is also leading the average list with 179. Roy Milnes is second with 173, Al Carrievau is third with 171, and Charley Papenous is fourth—one pin behind—with 170. Ralph Collen is in fifth with 169, Dave Cook is sixth with 168, and Carl Nass and Sam Rasmussen are tied for seventh with 167. There is a four-way tie for eighth at 165, with Herman Bertl, Tony Nelson, Harold Jarmin and Johnny Johnson dividing the honors. Doc Martozowka is ninth with 163.

The People's Choice

With the huge majority that Kim Sigler and Arthur H. Vandenberg polled in last Tuesday's election, it does not seem possible that anyone could believe that the people of Michigan haven't "had enough".

As one looks over the election returns from all over the country, it appears that all of the states have a majority of the people who feel filled up to the ears with red tape, bungling and bureaucracy.

The prospect, however, of a controlling G. O. P. bloc in both the House and Senate against a Democratic administration in the White House is not a pleasant picture—unless both sides now forget partisan politics and begin to think about our country, its industry, business, labor and financial condition.

That the people of Michigan want good, clean, honest government was truly borne out by the great vote of confidence given Kim Sigler and his state officers. They also handed him a couple of financial 'bugaboos' when Proposals Two and Three were also favored. To run the state efficiently and at the same time meet the requirements of Proposals Two and Three will take all the wisdom, judgment and commonsense of the newly-elected 'bribe-taker's Nemesis'.

We feel secure in saying that we think Kim Sigler will come through on this tough situation. R.W.S.

NOVEMBER 15, 1923.

Fire broke out in the Michelson Memorial Church at about 1:30 Wednesday afternoon and before it could be checked it totally destroyed the church and adjoining parsonage with a loss estimated at about $45,000. The fire was caused, it was claimed, by an overheated hot air pipe from the furnace.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Simpson who have been visiting the former's father in Cadillac, have returned to Grayling to reside.

Mrs. Forrest Barber is assisting in the County Treasurer's office during the time of the issuing of the new 1924 automobile licenses. They are now being handled locally instead of through the auditor general's office at Lansing.

The home of Howard Smith was destroyed by fire at noon Monday, the fire starting from some unknown source. Mrs. Smith was away, and Mr. Smith, who works nights, was sleeping. Before the fire was discovered it had gained much headway and people who appeared on the scene were able to save only a portion of the furniture.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Reynolds are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son at Mercy Hospital yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Tony Trudeau have moved from the Boeson building into the house on the corner of Spruce and Ottawa streets recently vacated by the Lon Colleen family.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. George Willett, Thursday, November 8, a daughter.

A daughter, Mary Jane, was born to Mr. and Mrs. George Lands on Friday, November 9.

Mr. and Mrs. John Corwin celebrated their silver wedding anniversary last Thursday evening by entertaining their relatives at their farm home near Grayling.

Miss Della Beck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Beck, was united in marriage Saturday, Nov. 10, to Wilbur Simpson, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Simpson.

would be a sort of county manager in his authority.

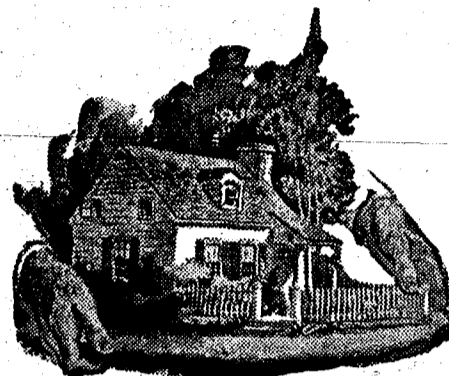

It is noted by Dr. Ford that 12 Michigan counties now possess the legal authority to appoint a controller, but only four of them—Calhoun, Genesee, Oakland and Macomb—have done so.

Among the county offices which Dr. Ford would abolish forthright are the office of county surveyor and office of county coroner. The register of deeds and the county clerk would be merged into one office. The county health officer would take over the functions of the county coroner.

It's quite a big dream. People of Michigan must be convinced first that they will get better service for their money. That's the real hitch.

What are the Facts about the Telephone Station?

EMPTY PROMISES NEVER SERVE ANY GOOD PURPOSE. EVERY PERSON WHO IS WAITING FOR A TELEPHONE — ALL THOSE WHO DESIRE ADDITIONAL TELEPHONE FACILITIES — AND THOSE WHO ARE IMPATIENT OVER SERVICE DELAYS — ARE ENTITLED TO KNOW THESE FACTS ABOUT THE SHORTAGES WHICH TELEPHONE COMPANIES THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY NOW FACE:

1. During the war, additional telephone equipment, telephones, cable, wire, poles and other vital materials could not be obtained in adequate quantities because of governmental restrictions, which were necessary to conserve materials for war uses and to insure that our armed forces would be supplied with the communications equipment they needed. Thus the war delayed, by several years, the normal expansion of facilities, as well as the repair of existing facilities.
2. With the end of the war, use of the telephone for both local and long distance service was expected to decrease, and the wartime demand for new telephones was expected to diminish. What has happened has been exactly the opposite!
3. Today, the telephone companies are staggering under the biggest traffic load in their history, and the number of unfilled applications for service is higher than ever before.
4. Orders for needed equipment have been placed with the manufacturers and suppliers, who, as a result, are faced with an engineering and production problem without parallel in the history of the business. Because of shortages of material and trained personnel, deliveries are uncertain. The indications are that it will take at least three years to balance production and demand, and for some items five years may be needed.
5. The shortages of materials have been further aggravated by numerous strikes in basic industries, with the result that one after another critical item has been in short supply, making our job of meeting service demands still more difficult.
6. Everybody knows how difficult it is to build a house, or buy an automobile, a pair of nylons or a white shirt. Telephone equipment is just as hard to get, or more so. How soon this situation will improve, nobody knows, but indications are that it will not be soon.

THESE, THEN, ARE THE CONDITIONS WHICH WE, LIKE OTHER TELEPHONE COMPANIES, NOW FACE, AND OVER WHICH WE HAVE NO CONTROL. WE ARE MAKING EVERY EFFORT TO MEET SERVICE DEMANDS, BUT THERE WILL CONTINUE TO BE UNAVOIDABLE DELAYS. IN THE MEANTIME, YOUR CONTINUED TOLERANCE AND UNDERSTANDING WILL BE APPRECIATED.

NO IMMEDIATE INCREASE PREDICTED IN SHOE SUPPLY

Recent increases in the amount of cattle slaughtered will not mean more shoes for your family this month, or next. Lola Belle Green, clothing specialist at Michigan State College, warns that it will be at least three (and probably five) months before shoe stocks are plentiful.

That is the period of time necessary to make the hides into a new shoe supply available for your local stores. Even hides from cattle slaughtered during July and August have not had time to increase the present shoe supply. Those hides will not offset the loss of the March to June slaughtering slump, even when their manufacture is completed.

Goatskin and kidskin supplies are not available in normal quantities for the making of women's shoes because the quantity imported is becoming lower all the time. Shoes made from reptile skins do not help the situation because of their higher cost. Thus, in the next few months, many women's shoes will be made from textiles.

You won't need shoes without shoes, but you may have to wait a while for the right style and color in your size. During the first half of this year more shoes were made than during any other six-month period in history. Even with the drop in output the last half of the year, it is predicted that 500 million pairs of shoes will be produced in 1946.

HERE'S TO HEALTH

Diabetes

When we read about people who lived in the Middle Ages and come across a description of the meals which were served then, we are sometimes shocked at the quantity of food that the well-to-do consumed. Perhaps, we should remember, however, that people were more active in those days than they are today.

Some of the diseases which people have today may be traced in part to their failure to adjust their eating habits to the lives they lead. One of the reasons that diabetes has become more common in recent years may be that people are eating too much rich food while living rather sedentary lives. This, of course, is not the only explanation for the greater prevalence of diabetes but it is undoubtedly one of the factors involved.

Diabetes is due to an overabundance of sugar in the blood. The body requires sugar for heat and energy and it obtains this sugar from carbohydrates—such foods as sweets, breads, cereals, potatoes, macaroni and spaghetti.

If more sugar is consumed than the body can use, the rest is stored away or turns to fat. Conversion of sugar into heat and energy is made possible by a secretion in the blood stream called insulin, which is manufactured by cells in the pancreas. If anything interferes with the flow of insulin, the body is unable to use the sugar consumed from carbohydrates and diabetes results.

Early symptoms of diabetes are constant thirst and hunger, even though a normal amount of food is eaten, loss of weight for no apparent reason and spells of weakness and dizziness.

If these symptoms are present, the individual should consult a doctor immediately. He will make a urinalysis and test the blood for sugar content. The earlier diabetes is discovered, the easier it is to control it.

The diabetic patient should be on a special diet as recommended by a doctor. Indiscriminate cutting down on carbohydrates is not sufficient to control the disease. The patient should be under medical care. Often the diabetic must take injections of insulin, made from the pancreas of certain animals, to supply the deficiency in his own blood. Insulin neither cures or prevents diabetes. It is an aid in controlling the disease and should be used only as the doctor advises.

How to Handle a Fortune

Some months ago I reported in the Clarion how Mel Bates' uncle died up north, and left him with a tidy fortune.

Naturally, our town was curious to see how Mel would spend it: Traveling around the world ... getting a new house or car ... wearing fancy clothes ... or dining on cold pheasant and champagne ...?

We can now report, Mel hasn't changed a bit! Drop in on him any night, and you'll find him in his shirt sleeves by the fire, chatting with the Missus, sharing a mellow glass of beer with friends.

From where I sit, Mel has learned the art of handling money—as well as handling people. You don't let cash-in-the-bank push you around any more than you let people push you around. If you like the simple, homey life; companionship and quiet ways; a glass of beer and friendly talk—that's worth a fortune, after all!

Home Extension News—AuSable Group

The AuSable Home Extension Group met at the home of Mrs. Alfred Borchers for the first meeting of the year, Oct. 16.

Color was discussed thoroughly, and Mrs. Ida Papendick from our Grayling group came down to give the lesson.

Following this, a light lunch was served by the hostess, Mrs. Borchers.

Your support at the polls on November 5, assured my election as the next Sheriff of Crawford County. Your confidence is sincerely appreciated, and I promise you it will be respected.

William Golnick

Sheriff-Elect
of Crawford County.

The New First Family of Michigan

Our new leaders for this year are: Mrs. Alfred Borchers, leader; Mrs. John Knecht, Chairman; and Mrs. Perry Wells, Secretary.

Our next meeting will be held November 13 at 8:00 p. m. at the home of Mrs. John Knecht. The lesson is to be given by Mrs. Al Borchers.

The Army Ground Forces offers you A NEW LIFE OUT THERE

Look toward Korea and Japan! A thrilling new job and a new life—with interesting work, sports, entertainment and travel opportunities—can be had for the asking by qualified young men who volunteer for the 1st Cavalry, 11th Airborne, 6th, 7th, 24th or 25th Infantry Divisions.

What an opportunity . . . what a job! Training in one of these crack units will stand you in good stead wherever you go. Study a foreign language. Learn the fascinating details of Military Government—so vital to future peace and prosperity.

Japan's "Isles of Pines" are but a sample of the attractions of an Army career in the Far East. The Army has reopened comfortable hotels, theaters, swimming pools, tennis clubs, golf courses, ball parks. These—familiar haunts of pre-war tourists—and many new developments—provide a broad choice of recreation.

Not everyone can measure up to this job. Only 3-year enlistees who meet prescribed physical and mental standards can enjoy the benefits of such a job. High overseas pay, good food and lodging and a generous retirement plan make your future in the Army Ground Forces too good to miss! See your nearest Army Recruiting Officer for full details.

Tomorrow is Forever

By GWEN BRISTOW

WNU FEATURES

"I have not forgotten," he said. Elizabeth sprang up. "Then you do remember me, Arthur!"

"No," he returned quickly. "Sit down, Mrs. Herlong." He spoke so forcefully that she obeyed him. "You interrupted me," he went on. "I was about to say I have not forgotten anything that happened to me before the war. My name is Erich Kessler. I was born in Berlin. I was in this country many years ago, but I was never in Tulsa, Oklahoma, in my life, and I never saw you until your husband brought me here for dinner one night last October. Now believe me."

He spoke to her earnestly. Elizabeth sat listening, half convinced by his insistence. "You told me," he continued, "that I reminded you of someone you had once known, and you couldn't remember who it was. Now you have remembered; something about me—I don't know what, since I never saw him—calls your first husband to mind. Tonight, under a great strain, you suddenly realize who it is I recall to you, and your surprise is so great that you are even persuaded not only that I have some traits in common with that man, but that I am that man." He paused a moment, then resumed his argument. "Talk to me about it now, if that will be any relief to you. But there is one thing I beg of you."

"What?" she asked breathlessly. "Don't say anything to your husband about this."

"Good heavens above, you sound as if I were a lady in a crinoline!" She heard herself beginning to laugh again, and again made herself stop. "Do you think I'm sitting here aghast at the notion that my second marriage isn't legal, that my children—I'm not such a fool as that. There's nothing wrong with my present marriage, Arthur. You're legally dead, the United States Government says you are, they even wanted to pay me a pension. That has nothing to do with it. But you're young."

"Yes, I am," he returned with an attempt at lightness. "But I am not that other man."

"Then where did you get his eyes, his voice, his mind? I know you, Arthur. I loved you. I was married to you. You were my husband."

"You were nothing of the sort," he interrupted her harshly. "And if you don't get this illusion out of your mind you're going to be miserable the rest of your life. There is nothing I can do but deny it—no, there is something more I can do, and I'll promise you to do it."

"What else?"

"I'll go away. You'll never be troubled by me again. If I had dreamed this was going to happen no power on earth could have brought me here to destroy your peace. If you say the word, I'll go tonight."

"No!" she cried. "That won't change anything."

"Very well," said Kessler. "But you will make me a promise too."

"What is it?"

"That you will not trouble your husband with this. For it would trouble him, more than you can imagine in your present state. He'll be here in a few minutes. Your first impulse will be to blurt out words that tomorrow morning you'd give half your life to take back. Will you promise?"

"She did not answer, and he added, 'If you don't promise, I'll leave Beverly Hills tonight. I will not be the means of wrecking your peace or his.'"

"Yes," she said faintly. "I promise that. But you haven't convinced me. Everything you've said—I know you."

"He heard a car. Spratt was coming into the driveway. His voice called cheerily.

"Kessler! Ready to go?"

"Yes indeed, Mr. Herlong. I was waiting for you."

Kessler stood up and started for the car. Without paying much attention to what she was doing, Elizabeth was following him.

"Hope I wasn't too long," said Spratt. "Why Elizabeth, what are you doing here? I thought you'd be asleep by now."

"They had reached the side of the car."

"Mrs. Herlong was just about to go upstairs to bed," Kessler said. "She is very tired. She'll probably be sound asleep before you come back."

"I hope she is," Spratt leaned across the door. "Then good night, Elizabeth."

He kissed her. For an instant it was as though a stranger had kissed her, and then suddenly it was not. Dear Spratt. He was her husband. This wasn't he?—but he was Arthur.

"Or wasn't he?"

When Elizabeth awoke she could tell by the sun that it was late in the morning. Her first thought was that she should have been up to see Dick off to his eight-hundred class, then she remembered Dick was gone to boot-camp in San Diego. She sat up. It was after nine, so Cherry and Brian would be gone too, as well as Spratt. Elizabeth rang her bell.

The maid came in, bringing orange juice and the morning paper. "Why didn't anybody wake me?" Elizabeth asked.

"Mr. Herlong said not to. He said you were tired."

Spratt had left her a note, scribbled in pencil across a sheet of stationery. "Elizabeth—Glad you're getting a long sleep. I told Cherry and Brian to go on to school without bothering you. I have to leave now, will ring you later if anything turns up, otherwise will see you tonight. All well. Chin up, the war news looks pretty good this morning, anyway nothing lasts forever. I love you, thought I'd remind you in case I hadn't mentioned it lately. Spratt."

She got up and went to her telephone. Apparently he had been waiting for her call, for he answered the phone himself. "When she told him who she was he said, 'Yes, Mrs. Herlong?' and waited expectantly."

"First," said Elizabeth, "I want to apologize for my startling behavior last night."

"Then you do know this morning," he asked eagerly, "that you were mistaken?"

"I don't know that, not yet. But at least this morning I can promise you to behave like an intelligent adult. You told me I could see you today. May I come over?"

"Certainly."

"Now?"

"Whenever you like."

"Thank you."

Kessler's housekeeper told her he was waiting for her in his study. Elizabeth went in and shut the door behind her. Kessler had been sitting before his typewriter, with sheets of manuscript around him. For an instant she wondered if he had been working, or if he had set the stage to make it look as if he found this so unimportant that he could go on with his work without interruption. But she thought of that only an instant. As she came in Kessler put his hand on his cane and stood up. Their eyes met, and Elizabeth said,

"I came here this morning to see if I was right or wrong in what I said to you last night. I was right."

Kessler drew in a quick breath, without answering. Elizabeth came nearer and sat down. Holding her handbag in her lap, she leaned back to look up at him.

"She said, 'I have not been drinking and I am not hysterical. I had nine hours' sleep, and when I woke up my impression of last night seemed like a mistake based on a chance resemblance. It was not a mistake.' She smiled at him, pleadingly. 'Arthur, let's face this and talk about it.'"

"I'll talk about it as long as you like," he answered her, and as he spoke he smiled her, as though sorry for her. "But it's not true, Mrs. Herlong."

But Elizabeth continued, "You have a scar on your arm where you were burnt by a splash of boiling chocolate one night when I was making fudge. You have another scar on your right knee, made when you and I were practicing fancy dives and you hit the edge of the pool."

Kessler sat down, and moved a pencil that was about to fall off the edge of his table. "I have so many scars," he said, "that no doubt you could find two that would fit those you are talking about." Then, supporting himself on his cane, he leaned toward her, and continued, "Mrs. Herlong, my body is such an accumulation of patches and makeshifts that to prove or disprove my likeness to any healthy man would be very difficult. I didn't grow this beard to disguise my face, but to cover some ugly lines on my chin that would make me even harder to look at than I am now. Yet you insist I resemble your first husband."

"You are talking in abstractions. I tell you, I know."

Kessler shook his head. Elizabeth shrank back into her chair, away from him. "How can you do this to me!" she exclaimed. "Don't you remember how I loved you?"

For a moment she covered her face with her hands. She did not know how thankful he was for that moment, when she did not see the tightening of his eyes and lips that even his grim self-control could not prevent. She got out a handkerchief and began twisting it between her fingers, then carefully untwisted it and folded it again. Her pause to regain her own calmness had given him time to regain his, and when he spoke again his voice was steady.

"Now that Dick has gone to fight for tomorrow's world," he said to her, "it would be a catastrophe to see his mother refusing to give up her dependence on yesterday."

Elizabeth started. "What on earth do you mean?"

He spoke to her in a low, intensely purposeful voice. "Mrs. Herlong, not long ago your son sat where you are sitting, defining in his own mind the question before this generation. At length he understood—I like to think I helped him understand—that he was living in one of the periods when the advance of civilization seems to halt because of forces that are trying to push it back instead of letting it go ahead as it was meant to do. He came to see that his side was the right and utilized it."

"You are sitting, defining in his own mind the question before this generation. At length he understood—I like to think I helped him understand—that he was living in one of the periods when the advance of civilization seems to halt because of forces that are trying to push it back instead of letting it go ahead as it was meant to do. He came to see that his side was the right and utilized it."

"You can't get it back, Mrs. Herlong," Kessler said gently. "But if you keep trying, you will lose what you have. And you have so much to lose now, so much more than you had twenty-five years ago."

Elizabeth moved forward in her chair, listening intently. The curious sense of guilt had not left her. "As for your first husband—"

Kessler began.

"Yes—what about him?"

"How old were you when you married him?"

"Eighteen." After she had spoken she realized that her answer had come as readily as though she had never had any reason for believing he knew this already.

"Eighteen!" Kessler repeated. "What did you know then about loving a man?"

"I thought I knew a great deal," she retorted.

"Naturally you thought so. How could you judge your feeling for him except by the standard you had then? But look at it now and see what it was by the standard of love you have today. A bright girl's rapture. Beautiful, no doubt, but no more than that."

"But what else is a young girl's love? What else should it be?"

(To Be Continued)

"Don't you remember how I loved you?"

Elizabeth's face, because those who fight to raise up the dead past eventually destroy them

Elizabeth sat listening, half convinced by his insistence. "You told me," he continued, "that I reminded you of someone you had once known, and you couldn't remember who it was. "That you will not trouble your husband with this. For it would trouble him, more than you can imagine in your present state. He'll be here in a few minutes. Your first impulse will be to blurt out words that tomorrow morning you'd give half your life to take back. Will you promise?"

"She did not answer, and he added, 'If you don't promise, I'll leave Beverly Hills tonight. I will not be the means of wrecking your peace or his.'"

"Yes," she said faintly. "I promise that. But you haven't convinced me. Everything you've said—I know you."

"He heard a car. Spratt was coming into the driveway. His voice called cheerily.

"Kessler! Ready to go?"

"Yes indeed, Mr. Herlong. I was waiting for you."

Kessler stood up and started for the car. Without paying much attention to what she was doing, Elizabeth was following him.

"Hope I wasn't too long," said Spratt. "Why Elizabeth, what are you doing here? I thought you'd be asleep by now."

"They had reached the side of the car."

"Mrs. Herlong was just about to go upstairs to bed," Kessler said. "She is very tired. She'll probably be sound asleep before you come back."

"I hope she is," Spratt leaned across the door. "Then good night, Elizabeth."

He kissed her. For an instant it was as though a stranger had kissed her, and then suddenly it was not. Dear Spratt. He was her husband. This wasn't he?—but he was Arthur.

"Or wasn't he?"

When Elizabeth awoke she could tell by the sun that it was late in the morning. Her first thought was that she should have been up to see Dick off to his eight-hundred class, then she remembered Dick was gone to boot-camp in San Diego. She sat up. It was after nine, so Cherry and Brian would be gone too, as well as Spratt. Elizabeth rang her bell.

The maid came in, bringing orange juice and the morning paper. "Why didn't anybody wake me?" Elizabeth asked.

"Mr. Herlong said not to. He said you were tired."

Spratt had left her a note, scribbled in pencil across a sheet of stationery. "Elizabeth—Glad you're getting a long sleep. I told Cherry and Brian to go on to school without bothering you. I have to leave now, will ring you later if anything turns up, otherwise will see you tonight. All well. Chin up, the war news looks pretty good this morning, anyway nothing lasts forever. I love you, thought I'd remind you in case I hadn't mentioned it lately. Spratt."

She got up and went to her telephone. Apparently he had been waiting for her call, for he answered the phone himself. "When she told him who she was he said, 'Yes, Mrs. Herlong?' and waited expectantly."

"First," said Elizabeth, "I want to apologize for my startling behavior last night."

"Then you do know this morning," he asked eagerly, "that you were mistaken?"

"I don't know that, not yet. But at least this morning I can promise you to behave like an intelligent adult. You told me I could see you today. May I come over?"

"Certainly."

"Now?"

"Whenever you like."

"Thank you."

Kessler's housekeeper told her he was waiting for her in his study. Elizabeth went in and shut the door behind her. Kessler had been sitting before his typewriter, with sheets of manuscript around him. For an instant she wondered if he had been working, or if he had set the stage to make it look as if he found this so unimportant that he could go on with his work without interruption. But she thought of that only an instant. As she came in Kessler put his hand on his cane and stood up. Their eyes met, and Elizabeth said,

"I came here this morning to see if I was right or wrong in what I said to you last night. I was right."

Kessler drew in a quick breath, without answering. Elizabeth came nearer and sat down. Holding her handbag in her lap, she leaned back to look up at him.

"She said, 'I have not been drinking and I am not hysterical. I had nine hours' sleep, and when I woke up my impression of last night seemed like a mistake based on a chance resemblance. It was not a mistake.' She smiled at him, pleadingly. 'Arthur, let's face this and talk about it.'"

"I'll talk about it as long as you like," he answered her, and as he spoke he smiled her, as though sorry for her. "But it's not true, Mrs. Herlong."

But Elizabeth continued, "You have a scar on your arm where you were burnt by a splash of boiling chocolate one night when I was making fudge. You have another scar on your right knee, made when you and I were practicing fancy dives and you hit the edge of the pool."

Kessler sat down, and moved a pencil that was about to fall off the edge of his table. "I have so many scars," he said, "that no doubt you could find two that would fit those you are talking about." Then, supporting himself on his cane, he leaned toward her, and continued, "Mrs. Herlong, my body is such an accumulation of patches and makeshifts that to prove or disprove my likeness to any healthy man would be very difficult. I didn't grow this beard to disguise my face, but to cover some ugly lines on my chin that would make me even harder to look at than I am now. Yet you insist I resemble your first husband."

"You are talking in abstractions. I tell you, I know."

Kessler shook his head. Elizabeth shrank back into her chair, away from him. "How can you do this to me!" she exclaimed. "Don't you remember how I loved you?"

For a moment she covered her face with her hands. She did not know how thankful he was for that moment, when she did not see the tightening of his eyes and lips that even his grim self-control could not prevent. She got out a handkerchief and began twisting it between her fingers, then carefully untwisted it and folded it again. Her pause to regain her own calmness had given him time to regain his, and when he spoke again his voice was steady.

"Now that Dick has gone to fight for tomorrow's world," he said to her, "it would be a catastrophe to see his mother refusing to give up her dependence on yesterday."

Elizabeth started. "What on earth do you mean?"

He spoke to her in a low, intensely purposeful voice. "Mrs. Herlong, not long ago your son sat where you are sitting, defining in his own mind the question before this generation. At length he understood—I like to think I helped him understand—that he was living in one of the periods when the advance of civilization seems to halt because of forces that are trying to push it back instead of letting it go ahead as it was meant to do. He came to see that his side was the right and utilized it."

"You are sitting, defining in his own mind the question before this generation. At length he understood—I like to think I helped him understand—that he was living in one of the periods when the advance of civilization seems to halt because of forces that are trying to push it back instead of letting it go ahead as it was meant to do. He came to see that his side was the right and utilized it."

"You can't get it back, Mrs. Herlong," Kessler said gently. "But if you keep trying, you will lose what you have. And you have so much to lose now, so much more than you had twenty-five years ago."

Elizabeth moved forward in her chair, listening intently. The curious sense of guilt had not left her. "As for your first husband—"

Kessler began.

"Yes—what about him?"

"How old were you when you married him?"

"Eighteen." After she had spoken she realized that her answer had come as readily as though she had never had any reason for believing he knew this already.

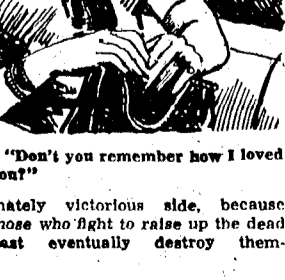

"Eighteen!" Kessler repeated. "What did you know then about loving a man?"

"I thought I knew a great deal," she retorted.

"Naturally you thought so. How could you judge your feeling for him except by the standard you had then? But look at it now and see what it was by the standard of love you have today. A bright girl's rapture. Beautiful, no doubt, but no more than that."

"But what else is a young girl's love? What else should it be?"

ENTERTAIN FOR SON-IN-LAW AND DAUGHTER

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Rasmusson were hosts at a family gathering at their home Saturday evening in honor of their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Nelson, of East Lansing, who were married on October 12th. Guests from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gierke of Manistee, Mrs. Walter Miller of Flushing, and Miss Eli Enling of Mt. Pleasant. The maternal grandmothers, Mrs. A. F. Gierke, and Mrs. David White of Grayling were among those present.

Bronze and yellow mums were placed throughout the rooms, while the buffet table, covered with a lace cloth, held a silver bowl of white mums and was guarded by white tapers. As the guests proceeded to the dining room for lunch, traditionally, the bride and groom cut the first piece of a lovely bride's cake that graced the center of the table. Assisting Mrs. Rasmusson were Mrs. Harold Rasmusson, who poured, Mrs. Wilfred Laurant and Miss Odie Sheehy.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Nelson served their country in the late war, the latter as a WAVE and the former as a member of the Army Air Force. The couple are making their home at 1035 Pennsylvania Avenue, Lansing, where the bride is a student at Michigan State College.

Celebrates 11th Birthday On November 11th

Ronald Larson, son of Major and Mrs. Ernest Larson of Camp Grayling, celebrated his 11th birthday on Armistice Day, November 11. He had 18 boy friends out for the afternoon and evening to help him note the occasion.

Following a big football game, dinner was served to the boys at a long table decorated with yellow tapers, and at each boy's place was a wax gun which was used as a place card. A large birthday cake trimmed in yellow formed a main part of the birthday dinner.

Games were played following the dinner, with Peter and Brad Stephan, Terry Hilton, Jim Bond, Roger May, Duane Worden and Glen Richardson being awarded the prizes. It was an Armistice Day that will long be remembered by Ronald, who was the recipient of many wonderful gifts. He celebrates his birthday on Armistice Day every year, but this was the only time his age and the date corresponded.

There will be a big Hunters Dance at Lovells Town Hall, Saturday night, Nov. 16. All invited to come. Rhythm King Orchestra will furnish the music. Hot dogs, coffee and doughnuts will be served from the kitchen.

Every place available seems to be filled with reservations for the hunting season.

Mrs. Mary Miller is again able to be out among her friends after a couple weeks' illness.

Mrs. Cora Thurston and Mrs. Rose Kessler, both of Twin Lakes, and both members of the "Cheerful Givers Club", attended the club meeting last Wednesday at the home of Margaret Wedding. There was a nice attendance and a good deal of business was attended to.

Rosa Bishaw spent the week-end with Margie Caid, who was home over the week-end from her duties at the Bay City Beauty school.

S. D. Kinsey of Crosswell, Mich., visited the past two weeks at the home of Harold Johnson. Mr. Kinsey has been here several times before; he is Mrs. Johnson's grandfather. He has now reached the ripe old age of 89 years, and, as usual, enjoyed his visit, as did the relatives and friends on whom he called. Russell Fischer of Flint called on old friends in Lovells, Sunday. Edgar Douglas, who has been a patient at Grayling Mercy Hospital for the past two weeks, was dismissed Saturday.

Margaret Husted of West Branch will assist at the Douglas Hotel during the hunting season. Mrs. Anna Clark and Mr. and Mrs. C. Stillwagon were dinner guests at the E. J. Caid home, Sunday.

Showers For Bride-To-Be

Miss Jeanne Hanson was guest of honor at a bridal shower Tuesday evening, November 12, given by Mrs. George Hilton and Mrs. Menno Corwin at the Hilton home at Lake Margrethe. Forty-two guests were present. Games were played during the evening, followed by a buffet supper. The dining room was attractively decorated in a white color scheme, with a large doll, dressed in ivory satin and a long veil, as the bride, standing on a mirror centering the buffet, and tall white tapers on each side. The centerpiece for the table was made of double hearts, with a miniature bride and groom at the base, and white triple tapers on each end of the long table. Over the archway and mirrors were large hearts and arrows, which read "Jeanne and Sandy". The bride-to-be was the recipient of many beautiful gifts.

Out of town guests were Mrs. Ernest Corwin of Roscommon, Mrs. Swen Madsen, Mrs. Milford Quay and Mrs. Howard Madsen, of Gaylord.

I sincerely appreciate the fine support given me in the Election last week. The result was most gratifying.
